

OSPA Welcomes its Newest Lobbyist Elizabeth Remley

By Vox Public Relations Public Affairs

Elizabeth Remley joins Vox Public Relations Public Affairs as Director of Public Affairs and will represent OSPA as the association's lobbyist for state government relations.

Elizabeth's career is centered on providing clients with expertise in public affairs, strategic communications and government relations. A lobbyist for CFM Strategic Communications since 2006, Elizabeth managed legislation, rulemaking, reputation and relationships for numerous clients including a major hospital and delivery network, a mid-sized health plan, and numerous technology, public infrastructure and transportation clients. In 2011, she was engaged to represent client positions during discussion that led to creation of Oregon's health insurance exchange as well as the framework guiding the state's health care transformation.

Elizabeth is a graduate of the University of Oregon, where she co-founded Women in Business, a social network for women pursuing business careers, and earned a Bachelor of Arts in public relations and a Bachelor of Science in economics. Elizabeth is mentor and director of communications for Minds Matter of Portland, an academic mentoring program for high school students.

Elizabeth is an avid snowboarder and gardener, and is always up for going on long trail runs.
